Harlem Residency in Family Medicine
Now Accepting Applications for July 2012

The Institute for Family Health is recruiting highly qualified applicants for eight Family Medicine PGY1 positions to begin training in July 2012 at a newly accredited Family Medicine Residency Program, affiliated with the Mount Sinai School of Medicine. The residents will be trained at the Family Health Center of Harlem, an EHR-equipped community health center located in this culture-packed historic Manhattan neighborhood and at the Mount Sinai Hospital.

The program is a federally designated “Teaching Health Center,” designed to train residents to provide outstanding primary care to medically underserved patients of all ages. This residency is one of only a handful of health center-led residency programs in the nation. Residents will practice in a newly constructed, state-of-the-art outpatient facility offering co-located dental, behavioral health and social services, based upon a patient centered medical home model.

About the Institute for Family Health

The Institute for Family Health is a mission-driven health organization with a rich history and expert leadership. Since 1983 we have grown from a small non-profit with four staff members to one of the largest community health centers in New York State, serving over 85,000 patients annually at 26 locations. We have started four family medicine residency programs since 1986, Harlem is the newest, and have graduated over 200 residents serving in multiple practice, research, academic and administrative roles across the country.

The Institute is committed to high-quality, affordable health care for all. We strive for excellence at each of our practices, while accepting all patients regardless of their ability to pay. We offer primary care, mental health, dental care, social work and many other services to patients of all ages. As a federally-qualified community health center (FQHC) network, we meet national standards for affordable, accessible, comprehensive health care services. We are accredited by the Joint Commission and recognized by the National Committee for Quality Assurance as a Level 3 patient-centered medical home, the highest recognition available.

In addition to operating health centers, we use our expertise and resources to address racial and ethnic disparities in health, advance the use of health information technology, and find innovative ways to improve care for diabetes, depression, women’s health, HIV and other priorities in the communities we serve. We also train health students and professionals at all levels.

The Institute is committed to improving the health care system, particularly for individuals and communities who historically have had limited access to care. We engage in research to improve health care services, and participate in policy development at the local, state and national levels.

We welcome your application to join us in this exciting new venture.
